

The World Community
for Christian Meditation - USA

Of Irish and English parentage, Laurence Freeman was educated by the Benedictines and studied English Literature at Oxford University. Before entering monastic life, he worked with the United Nations in New York, in banking and journalism. He is the director and spiritual guide of the World Community for Christian Meditation, an inclusive contemplative community. He now resides at Bonnevaux, the WCCM's international home in France, and a center for peace where meditation is practiced and taught as a way to personal and social transformation.

Religion in our secular society today is often highly politicised and therefore polarised. This prevents religious people from contributing to the depolarising of society. This is another good reason for developing a contemplative Christianity which remains rooted in the person of Jesus and the teaching of the Gospel while remaining more free to engage in healing dialogue and reconciliation. To rediscover the contemplative dimension of Christianity we must rediscover the contemplative practice of prayer. This is the gift of Christian meditation for our time.
